The poems are illustrated by Quentin Blake. It's the shortest children's book he wrote. There are a total of six poems in the book, each of the fairy tales present humbly deviating from the traditional version. In Cinderella, the plot remained faithful to the original story until one of the ugly sisters switched his shoe with the only Cinderella left behind the ball. However, when the prince sees that the shoe fits one of the sisters, he decides not to marry her, and instead cuts her head on the spot while standing. When the prince removes the head of the second sister and does the same to Cindy, she wants to be married instead to a decent man. Her fairy godmother grants this desire and she marries her to a simple, regular jam-maker. In Jack and Beanstalk, the beans grow gold leaves to the top. Jack's mother sends him to pick them up, but when Jack hears the giant threaten to eat it after the giant smells it, he goes down without collecting any gold. Jack's mother then ascends after accusing Jack of being stinky, but is eaten. Indestructible, Jack decides to bathe, and then climbs and collects the leaves itself, as the giant is now unable to smell it since it is clean. Now rich, Jack decides to bathe every day. Snow White and the seven dwarves begin familiarly, but after the hunter agrees not to kill Snow White, she takes a job as a cook and waitress for seven former jockeys (the dwarfs). Even though those jockeys are compulsive players on horse racing, they didn't really happen. So Snow White solves itselfand go back to steal the magic mirror, which correctly predict the winning horse and does Seven jockeys (and snow white) millionaires, with the moral that "gambling is not a sin / on condition that you always win". [1] Goldilocks and the three bears have a slightly different set-up for the rest of the poems, as the story is maintained the same as the traditional story, but with continuous comments of the narrator on how they are in a scary way Goldilocks and like anyone It makes sense would take the side of the bears above his (with the narrator who tells the story as if he talked to his mother bear). After the end, the narrator says he would prefer a final where the three bears return and eat Goldilocks. In Little Red Riding Hood and the wolf, based on a small small hood, the wolf enters the house of the grandmother and the devours before wearing her clothes to eat little red hood. The cap is not disturbed, however, and calmly pulls a gun out of its underwear and shoot the wolf ("the little girl smiles / her eyelid flicker / she whips a gun from her panties / tip to the head of the creature and bang! bang! bang! she shoots him ... dead.") ã, ã, ~" giving it a new wolfskin coat. [2] In the three small pigs, the wolf quickly blows straw houses and sticks, devouring The first two pigs. The third brick house is too strong, so the wolf resolves to return that evening with dynamite. The third pig has other plans, however, and asks for the small red driving cap to come to treat the Wolf. Ever The Sharpshooter, Red Riding Hood earns a second coat of Wolfskin and a pig leather travel case. [3] Audio Book An audio book of Dahl Rims Rims was released, read by Timothy West and prizard scales ; This version was also transformed into an A-a-one BBey Home Entertainment in the 90s as part of their time video range. A later version was narrated by the Scottish actor Alan Cumming. [4] Animated adaptations The book, as explained above, has been adapted in an ova that has been done in the style of Quentin Blake illustrations. The book was later adapted in a special CGI in two special parts for BBC, shown for the first time on 26 and 27 December 2016. [5] was appointed to the 90th Academy Awards for the best short animated.
